- 1 Boy: Are there nice beaches in your country?

Girl: Only on the east coast. The west coast is desert.

Boy: So where is the main city?

Girl: The biggest city is in the north east, where it's cool.

Boy: Is that where you're from?

Girl: I didn't grow up in the city. I'm from a village in the north-west.

Boy: I see.

- 2 Man: How was your trip and the festival?

Woman: It was interesting. I saw a lot of outdoor drama.

Man: Did you hire a bike?

Woman: I know that's how a lot of people see the city, but I get scared cycling on roads I don't know, so I toured the place on foot.

Man: You're very brave to go on holiday alone. I would be scared.

Woman: It was only a short trip. Anyway, I met up with my old friend Diane, who lives there.

Man: How nice.

- 3 Woman: Did you have a busy day?

Man: Yes. I had my aerobics class, and before that I studied in the library for hours.

Woman: You should relax more!

Man: I relax plenty. I sunbathed in the park until lunchtime.

Woman: Maybe I can come with you next time!

- 4 We regret to announce that all of today's services to the airport are cancelled. Passengers who wish to travel to the airport should take any train from platform 3, get off at New Cross and take bus x45 to the airport. Please allow extra time for your journey.

- 5 Man: Hi, Charles. I'm sorry I didn't have time to see you yesterday. Are you free today? I'm food shopping with Sue at the moment, and I'm catching the 9:30 pm flight to Bristol, but maybe you can join me to play a board game. Ring me when you get this message.

Tom: Hi, Rebecca.

Rebecca: Hi, Tom.

Tom: How was the boxing class?

Rebecca: Oh, I decided not to go. I'd prefer to do an outdoor sport.

Tom: How about archery? Paula invited me to the beginner's group she organises on Tuesdays. Let's try it together.

Rebecca: No, sorry, I have to take Molly to her scuba diving club and back on Tuesdays.

Tom: That's a shame. Well, you're welcome to go jogging with me any time. I find it quite boring on my own.

Rebecca: That's kind of you. I'm not a good runner, though. Could I ride my bike alongside you?

Tom: Why not? It might be fun that way.

Hi, everyone. Your adventure holiday starts here! Unfortunately we can't do all of the activities we list on our website this week, because the weather has been awful and it would be dangerous to do anything on the river. So instead of kayaking and swimming, we will trek to a mountain waterfall tomorrow. Today's forecast says there will be another storm tonight, so my advice to you is to put your tents up before 6 o'clock if you don't want to get wet!

Woman: These days the Amazon Rainforest isn't as wet as you might think. Droughts are happening in the region much more often than in the past. To explain the situation, here's ecologist Dr Darren Biggs. Dr Biggs, it's called a rainforest, so surely wet weather is usual in the Amazon?

Darren: In fact there is very little rain in about half of the Amazon region for three to five months of the year. That's normal and it didn't use to be a problem. But these days, fire is being used to remove trees by people who want to use the land for farming. That's bad enough, but those fires can spread easily where the forest is dry.

Woman: So deforestation is the big problem here?

Darren: That combined with climate change. We expect to see one very severe drought in the Amazon every hundred years, but there have been at least two in the last 10 years, so it's becoming more likely that a forest fire there will get out of control.

Woman: So why is it so important that we conserve the Amazon?

Darren: I think the most important reason is that trees remove from the air carbon dioxide, or CO₂, which is the harmful gas produced by human industry. Too much CO₂ will lead to more climate change. The Amazon can remove about 1.5 billion tonnes of CO₂ from the atmosphere in a year. But dying trees actually put CO₂ into the atmosphere. The Amazon trees that died in 2010 released about 8 billion tonnes of CO₂ – that's about 2.5 billion tonnes more CO₂ than the United States of America produced in 2009.

Woman: So if we destroy the Amazon, we harm the whole Earth.

In the 1950s, and 1960s, it was normal to have just one television set in your home. Watching TV was therefore a shared, family experience. Perhaps surprisingly, after decades when many people put televisions in their kitchens and even bedrooms, it seems the whole family is coming together again in the living room. British families are more likely to spend time in front of the same TV show now than in the 1990s. So why is this? One reason is the popularity of portable devices that support video media, such as smartphones and tablet computers. A teenager today can watch what he or she wants in any room in the house with one of these gadgets and a set of headphones. But it's not just teenagers who use other technology while watching TV. Most British TV viewers say they use their phones or the Internet while watching TV, often to comment on the programme they are watching. Another reason the whole family is found in the living room more often is the size of the TV there these days. The main TV in the house is far bigger than the others, so it attracts people of all ages to watch sport and the most popular entertainment shows, like talent shows.

I was the first person from my family to go to university, so relatives from all over the country and even America came to my graduation ceremony. I was a little embarrassed about how big the group was. To my surprise, when I collected my certificate, they introduced me as 'student of the year', and all my family cheered. I was pleased and embarrassed at the same time!

I didn't plan anything very special for my 30th birthday, just an Italian meal with my favourite friends. At the end of the meal, they gave me a present from all of them – a big picture to put on my wall. In fact, it's lots of pictures. Each one of them did a drawing that represents something we've done together.

Every year my town holds a spring festival and all the schoolchildren in the town design a poster to advertise the festival. It's a competition, and the winning design is used in every town in the region. The winner also gets to start the Spring Festival parade. I won it when I was 10. Hitting the drum to begin the procession was one of the highlights of my childhood.

My sister was born when I was 11, so I can remember everything about it. The baby came in the middle of the night and I went to the hospital with my parents. The nurses and doctors looked after me and I was one of the first people to see and hold my sister.
